

It's that time of the year again

The fire season is upon us once again and the bombers operate very regularly at Bunbury

Like we always give way to the RFDS, it's just good sense and good airmanship to give these guys right-of-way and not do anything to hold them up. Remember, it could be your house on fire!

A LESSON FOR EVERY EMPLOYEE

A shopkeeper watching over his shop is really surprised when he sees a dog coming inside the shop. He shoos him away but later, the dog is back inside again. So he goes over to the dog and notices that it has a note in its mouth. He takes the note which reads: "Can I have 12 bars of soaps and a bottle of shampoo, please? The money is with the dog." The Shopkeeper looks inside the dog's mouth and to his surprise there is a $50 note in his mouth. So he takes the money and puts the soap, shampoo and change in a bag, and then places it in the dog's mouth.

The shopkeeper is so impressed, and since it is the closing time, he decides to follow the dog. The dog walks down the street and, when it comes to the zebra crossing, it waits for the signal to turn green. It then walks across the road to the bus stop. While it's waiting at the stop it looks up the timetable for the bus. The shopkeeper is flabbergasted as the dog gets into the bus and sits on a vacant seat. The shopkeeper follows the dog. The dog waits for the conductor to come to his seat, gives the change to the conductor and shows him the neck belt to keep the ticket. The shopkeeper and all the other people on the bus are astonished.

The dog then moves to the front exit and waits for the bus stop to arrive, looking outside. As soon as the stop is in sight he wags his tail to inform the driver to stop. Then, not even waiting for the bus stop to stop, the dog jumps off and runs to the house nearby. It opens a big iron gate and rushes towards the door. As it approaches the door, it changes his mind and walks towards the garden. The dog walks up to the window and beats his head several times on the window. It then walks back to the door and waits. The fascinated shopkeeper walks up to the door and watches a big guy open the door.

The guy starts beating, kicking and abusing the dog. The shopkeeper runs to stop the guy and says, "What in heaven are you doing? That dog is a genius and could be famous worldwide". The guy responds, "You call this clever? This is the third time this week that the dog has forgotten the door keys."

MORAL OF THE STORY:

While you may continue to exceed onlookers' expectations, you will always fall short of the boss's expectations.
